2018–2019 marks the fourth year of the University of South Carolina’s Graduate Civic Scholars Program. To date, 45 students from 26 academic programs have participated. This year’s Scholars come from four colleges: Arts and Sciences, Education, Music, and Public Health.

Katya Altman
Environmental Health Sciences, PhD Student

RoKami Gillette
Teaching and Learning, PhD Student

Akeen Hamilton
Health Promotion, Education, and Behavior, PhD Student

Eboni Haynes
Health Services Policy and Management, PhD Student

Tara Kenworthy
Clinical-Community Psychology, PhD Student

Laura MacGowan
English, MA Student

Jennifer Mandelbaum
Health Promotion, Education, and Behavior, PhD Student

Ayan Mitra
Teaching and Learning, PhD Student

Sabrina Raber
Music Performance, MM Student
WORD CLOUD OF RESEARCH INTERESTS

ABOUT THE GRADUATE CIVIC SCHOLARS PROGRAM

The GCSP emphasizes the importance of collaboration between university and community partners and cohort-based professional development. Scholars in this interdisciplinary program will present their findings at Discover USC in April 2019 and receive a transcript notation upon completion of the program.

The GCSP, begun in 2015, is organized by the Graduate School in cooperation with the Career Center, Office of the Vice President for Research, Office of Student Engagement, Graduate Student Association, and Center for Teaching Excellence. Professors Lucy Ingram (Health Promotion, Education, and Behavior) and Allison Marsh (History) serve as Co-Directors for 2018-2019.

For more information, contact Dr. Heather Brandt in the Graduate School at hbrandt@sc.edu or 803.777.4243.